

The Global Impact of the 2012 U.S. Presidential Elections

While voters in fifty states cast their ballots and election officials tally the results, the eyes of the world are turned to the United States and the outcome of the 2012 presidential election. Should the world expect a meaningful change in U.S. foreign policy direction? How will the election outcome influence international financial markets? What international challenges await the next administration and how might they be addressed? A panel of experts will discuss the outcome of the 2012 U.S. presidential election and explore its broader implications for the nation and the world. In addition to providing insights that draw on their particular areas of expertise, panelists will also welcome questions and comments from audience members.

Wednesday, November 7, 2012

2:00 – 4:00 p.m.

University of Macau Library
The American Corner, 2nd floor

Panelists will include:

Andrew Moody (Moderator)

Associate Professor of English and Associate Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Humanities, University of Macau

Chen Dingding

Assistant Professor of Government and Public Administration, University of Macau

Song Weiqing

Assistant Professor of Government and Public Administration, University of Macau

Aleksandra Thurman

Assistant Professor of Government and Public Administration, University of Macau

Sponsored by:

University of Macau
Department of Government and Public Administration

U.S. Consulate General
Hong Kong and Macau